This table serves as a demonstration of how the Rule of 72 concept works from a mathematical standpoint. It is not intended to represent an investment. The chart uses constant rates of return, unlike actual investments which will fluctuate in value. It does not include fees or taxes, which would lower performance. It is unlikely that an investment would grow 10% or greater on a consistent basis. The figures above are for educational purposes only to explain the concept and does not resemble any past present and future performances of the stock market. There are no guarantees that the figures shown here are achievable in any environment.
